Build your own capital, brick by brick

The National Capital Authority (NCA) will be touring its educational travelling exhibition, Brick by Brick: Build Your Own Capital, to its next destination at the Bunbury Library in April.

The exhibition will be opened at the Bunbury Library by Mayor Gary Brennan on Wednesday, 6 April 2016 at 10.30am.

The NCA's Outreach and Education Officer, Roslyn Hull, said participants were encouraged to be creative and build a new National Capital using LEGO™ or replicate iconic national institutions and buildings in Canberra.

"As part of this education program, children and their families are asked to think about their future and their capital's future, to explore what they would want to see in the Canberra of tomorrow," Ms Hull said.

"They can then let their ideas take shape and with over 30,000 LEGO™ bricks to play with, the possibilities are endless."

Brick by Brick is designed for children from four years of age and is suitable for a range of abilities. Construction sheets are available for visitors to recreate the major institutions and attractions that identify the capital, from Australian Parliament House to the National Carillon.

Bunbury Mayor Gary Brennan said the exhibition was an opportunity for children in regional Western Australia to experience our national capital without having to travel to Canberra.

"Bunbury is pleased to host this exciting exhibition which will help children from throughout the region appreciate the significance of Canberra in a hands-on and playful environment," Mr Brennan said.

Brick by Brick: Build Your Own Capital officially opens to the public at the Bunbury Library on 6 April and runs until 5 June.
